North Carolina Theatre Conference

The Pinecrest Players are proud members of the North Carolina Theatre Conference. NCTC sponsors the high school play festival each year, and Pinecrest along with nearly 100 other schools statewide participate in the festival. This year, the Pinecrest Players performed The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County at the regional play festival, and received the following honors.

Excellence in Acting: Holly Strother

Excellence in Physical Comedy: Pat Hardison and Cody Goodwin

Excellence in Costume Design: Ashley Raper, Claire Sellers, Erin Kratzer,
Taylor Wallace

Excellence in Directing: Adam W. Faw
Superior Rating

The production of Jumping Frog did not end at the festival, though. The Pinecrest Players took this production on tour to middle and elementary schools throughout the county. Through eight performances at eight different schools, the ensemble performed for well over 1,000 young people countywide.

Briana, the very best to you and the cast. Break a leg! We are very proud of you and love you very much! Nini and mo

A Letter from the Director

The following article was published in the February 2013 edition of 'Education Leadership.'

'State of the Arts'

A recent report from the National Center for Education Statistics found that close to 90 percent of public elementary and secondary schools in the United States offer music and visual arts instruction and that a majority of elementary student receive this instruction at least once a week from a certified art or music teacher. That's the good news.

But there's sobering news as well. The report, which looked at access to arts education in US public schools, also found that, except for music instruction in secondary schools, arts instruction has declined across the country.

- Six percent of public elementary schools (serving 1.3 million students) don't offer music, and 17 percent (serving nearly 4 million students) don't offer visual arts.
- Nine percent of public secondary schools (serving 800,000 students) don't offer music, and 11 percent (serving 1.4 million students) don't offer visual arts.
- Ninety-seven percent of public elementary schools (serving 23 million students) don't offer any instruction in dance or theatre, 88 percent of public secondary schools (serving 18 million students) don't offer dance, and about 55 percent of public secondary schools (serving 9 million students) don't offer theatre.

One particularly troubling finding is equity related: Schools with the highest percentage of students who are eligible for free or reduced-price lunch are far less likely to provide their students with access to arts education.

I am not just an arts teacher...I am also an arts advocate. To me, this means that I take it as my personal mission to ensure that students not only in my classroom have access to quality arts education, but students across the county, state, and country as well. I have often said that Moore County is an incredible place to be an arts educator. I consider myself fortunate to have a job teaching theatre at all in the current economy. But to teach in a community that shares my passion for the arts, to have access to the amazing support and resources that this area offers...I must have done something right in a past life.

BREAK A LEG PINECREST PLAYERS!

However, a community like ours is the exception, not the rule. Unfortunately, the majority of students in our state don't have access to the same level of arts education. When budgets are cut, often the first thing that happens is elementary and middle school arts positions are combined (so teachers travel to multiple schools within a single day), if not cut completely.

In my dream world, the arts would not take precedence above all else. However, in that world, they would be given an honest fair shake. They would be treated as a true core subject in the classroom, beside math, social studies, and English, as an indispensable part of each student's education in all levels of schooling. In this ideal world, if budget cuts threatened an arts position or a program, the community would rise up fiercely to defend it...as fiercely as if someone suggested cutting the football program at a school.

I realize that I am preaching to the choir, however, as if you are reading this letter in the program, you are already here supporting arts education. However, I find that in discussions with friends, many people don't even know where to start in fighting for the arts. Here are some suggestions...

1. Get involved locally. Many communities have strong arts councils. The Arts Council of Moore County is a strong supporter of the arts in our county, and is always looking for donations of time or resources.
2. Get involved statewide...Ally yourself with a well established arts advocacy group. NC has many organizations that advocate. One of the strongest groups is ArtsNC, a statewide advocacy group for all of the arts. Check them out at www.artsnc.org.
3. Find out what is happening with arts education in your state. Currently, the state legislature is considering Senate Bill 874 (House Bill 1112), that would include a unit of arts education as a graduation requirement for high school. While it is not a comprehensive K-12 arts plan that many of us would love to see, it is a start, and it would help solidify the arts as a core subject.
4. Contact your local legislator with your message of arts advocacy: Our state representative James Boles (Jamie.Boles@ncleg.net) and our state senator Jerry Tillman (Jerry.Tillman@ncleg.net) are always happy to hear from their constituents.
