A Message from the Director

I believe that arts education is an absolutely vital part of our schools, and should be an indispensable part of every student's education. I am not alone in this belief...multitudes of artists, legislators, educators, parents, students, and professionals of varying fields share this belief.

Convincing the public that arts education is important for all students has become one of my missions in life. I know that the students in this show have learned so much more than choreography, music, and dialogue. Their public school arts education has taught them about hard work, leadership, risk taking, collaboration, and so much more.

Below is an excerpt from an op-ed piece that appeared in the Fayetteville Observer. The writer very eloquently makes the case for the arts from a scientist's point of view. His name is Holden Thorpe. He is the Chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Son of Cape Fear Regional Theatre Founders Herbert and Bo Thorpe, Holden grew up a child of the arts, spending much of his childhood in the theatre.

A giant New Yorker cartoon that hangs in my office shows a co-worker speaking to his boss across the desk while holding a memo in his hand. The caption reads "I'll be happy to give you innovative thinking. What are the guidelines?"

Dilbert cartoonist Scott Adams put it differently: "Creativity is allowing yourself to make mistakes," he said. "Art is knowing which ones to keep."

The arts contribute more to education than making students well-rounded or giving a handful of kids what they need to be career artists. Learning the arts teaches kids to create, shows them beauty, and illustrates emotion. Creativity, beauty, and emotion are not just nice-to-haves, they're essential. Solutions to global warming and world hunger require this squishy stuff. Math textbooks don't cover getting people to do things together and visualizing new options when things seem bad.

But art does. Art fills. Art creates. Art loves.

I've spent big money going to executive education classes that teach leaders to be creative. Know what they do for all that money? Put groups in a room with boxes of crayons and tell them to produce images that lead to new ideas. This kind of imaging aids solving social problems, leading others, and doing science.

Science, by definition, has no soul. But scientists do. Science without scientists is static, an intolerable condition while diseases rage on and energy supplies dwindle. Only soul-equipped scientists can produce more knowledge, and only emotional human innovators can take that knowledge and generate solutions.

As the arts fade from public education, blame standardized testing. Not on the tests, the arts sit fearfully, waiting to be cut. If they came along today, Mozart, Shakespeare, and Da Vinci would be children left behind. One more reason for folks who can afford it to put their kids in private school, just as the voucher advocates want.

I try to remember that college freshmen are high-school seniors only 2 months or so before they come to Chapel Hill. So what happens in K-12 matter to us-a lot. We must exhibit the will to hang on to arts education if we want solutions for society, if we want leaders, if we want know-how with a soul. —Holden Thorpe

If you feel as I do...as many educators, parents, and students do...please take the time to contact your state lawmakers, county officials, and school board members and let them know your feelings.
